Ducks and certain waterfowls do not get wet because their feathers are kept in an oily condition by small oil glands. While paddling about in the water, ducks frequently bend back and rub oil on their heads from the glands at the base of the tail, and then oil their feathers with their heads. In addition to being supplied with oil, the feathers of a duck are exceeding dense which aids in keeping out the water.

Find Animal Life Waxes Then Wanes

Strange Outside Influence Dominates Man, Beast and Plant—Great Laws Link All

Matamek River, Que.—Many interesting and surprising facts concerning animal life were revealed at the Canadian Biological Conference held recently in Matamek River, comments Lois Currier in The N.Y. Times. He writes:

"A summary of the work of the conference, prepared by Dr. Ellsworth Huntington of Yale University, has just been made available for publication."

Reviewing the discussions, Dr. Huntington says:

"Fluctuations of all sizes and sorts were discussed; not only irregular fluctuations but cycles with lengths ranging from 20 months to 260 years or more. Such fluctuations occur in trees, insects, fish of the sea, fish of the rivers, game birds, birds of prey, mice, rabbits and a dozen different fur-bearing animals that prey upon their smaller neighbors. They also occur in bacteria and other parasites which cause epidemics among animals and sweep them away by the millions. Reproduction, diseases and deaths among human beings also came in for discussion. Agricultural fluctuations and even financial panics were not neglected. A number of solar, lunar and meteorological cycles were suggested as causes of the cycles in plants, animals and man."

Somewhat to the surprise of the conference, continues the report, the main discussion did not centre around the well-known sunspot cycle of eleven years, but around shorter cycles of four years and especially nine or ten. The four-year cycle was described by Dr. A. O. Gross of Bowdoin College as being well shown by the migration of the snowy owl into New England. Charles Elton of Oxford University describes the same cycle in Far Northern mice, lemmings and ptarmigan, and also in the Arctic fox and snowy owl which feed upon lesser types of animals.

Similar cycles in Britain were cited and also in Norway where lemming migrations have been known for hundreds of years. Dr. William Rowan of the University of Alberta has found a four-year cycle in Western mice and shrews.

The regular course of events seems to be that the mice, lemmings and ptarmigan increase enormously in numbers for a season or two. Foxes, owls and other creatures are thus provided with abundant food. They, too, increase so fast that the number of skins brought in to the Hudson's Bay Company may be many times as great at one phase of the cycle as at another.

Thousands Die in "Crash"

Then there comes a change so sudden that the term "crash" was applied to it. The rodents and game birds begin to die by the thousands or millions. Some of them, such as the lemming, migrate long distances only to meet death in some other region. The creatures that have been feeding upon them soon become hungry. They, too, begin to die or else migrate to even greater distances. Snowy owls, for example, are described by Dr. W. H. H. Blair of the New York Zoological Park and by Dr. Gross as moving from sub-Arctic Canada to Southern New England and New York by thousands. They generally perish, for they do not appear to return north, and cannot breed so far south.

In the plains around Edmonton, according to Dr. Rowan, a cycle of almost ten years is evident in grouse, some other non-migratory birds and rabbits, and also in fox and other fur-bearers. Further north the voluminous records of the Hudson Bay Company have given Mr. Elton abundant data which show a cycle of 9.7 years in hares, muskrats, grouse, lynx, red fox, marten, wolf, mink and goshawks.

The extraordinary thing about all this is not merely that many different animals show the same periodicity, but that the same period occurs in the far northwest of Canada and all the way south into the United States. The increase or decrease in the animal population appears to begin in the Far North and to work its way southward and eastward, reaching the eastern Canada after three years or so. In spite of this the period of ten years or a little less is constant in each region.

Still more astonishing are the results of Dr. A. G. Huntsman of the University of Toronto and the Atlantic Biological Station. Dr. Earle B. Phelps of Columbia University, and Dr. D. L. Belding of Boston University School of Medicine. Using the records of the commercial catch of salmon in the bays along the coast of New Brunswick, Dr. Huntsman found indications that ten salmon come and go in periods of 9.6 years.

Still another type of evidence of the ten-year cycle was contributed by Dr. Huntington himself. His measurements of the annual rings of growth in the giant sequoias of California showed variations in rate of growth recurring in about ten years.

Cycle Found in Tree Growth

Thus once in ten years or a little less something seems to happen which causes an increase and then a de-

Hilltop and Aunt Ellen

I suppose there are some things we heard close in memory and which, in the naïveté of our childhood, we think can never change. So the little town of Hilltop was with me. And the strange part is that it is difficult to say why. My acquaintance with it was limited to about six short summer vacations in childhood, during which my family occupied a cottage just across the creek from the little town itself. To reach this quaint village you came down a long green meadow from the white clapboard house, passing under a great elm, its green somewhat grayed with the years, and under which (so the town folks will tell you) Indians once held their powwows, crossed the bridge and walked up a little dirt road, and presto! you were on Hilltop's main street.

Doubtless all of us remember some such old village with a white covered bridge leading into town and, perchance, a red one leading out, with board sidewalks lying between. I suppose all of us must remember, too, how harshly that which we misname progress has encroached slowly but surely upon all which we once held hallowed. So you will understand how rudely I was jarred, upon coming back some time ago, to be greeted, first by a new concrete bridge, and second, by a sign extolling the virtues of Hilltop's Royal Hotel—one hundred rooms and baths, with a radio in every room. Now, I would be the last to disparage the obvious advantages and utility of one hundred rooms with baths, to say nothing of an equal number of radios; but oh, I did miss the old covered bridge!

I missed its dusty shade and the chinks in its roof that let the sunlight filter through to lie upon the floor in multitudes of fantastic shapes. I missed, too, the old board walk, now concrete, that led to "Jack's General Store, Dry Goods and Notions," now the Hilltop National Bank. I had counted upon Jack's with its cool dimness and open cracks; barrel and the yellow cheese under glass covers. But again I was forced to bow to progress and forego an old and cherished delight.

Once there were canals and river warehouses doleful—the outskirts of the old town, but the canals are long since gone and the warehouses are deserted now. There is no use for such, for the trains have come and the motor trucks and, yes, even airplanes. In place of the dusty romance of hemp and turpentine and tar is a cold, sterile cleanliness of a modern factory that makes little paper boxes all day long. There is a challenge of brick and stone everywhere, and I thought all had yielded to its insistent clamor. It was with some misgiving, then, that I walked up a familiar tree-lined street to Aunt Ellen's. I had not seen her for years, too, had had its way here. As I walked, I remembered our meeting. It was upon the occasion of my first trip alone from our summer cottage to town. I was very brave in my smug assurance of eight years. The journey held no terrors with which I did not feel equal to cope. I was coming down the narrow boardwalk, she was coming up; and, in order to give her room to pass, I stepped too wide and tumbled down ignominiously to the street. In a second she had picked me up, wiped off my face with a consolatory dab to my nose with her white handkerchief smelling sweetly, I know now, of lavender.

"Would you," she inquired, "like some gingerbread?"

O discerning woman! Had she said chocolate cake, I would never have yielded. Even lemon tart: would have found me somewhat reluctant. But gingerbread!

"Has it," I inquired gravely, "raisins?"

"Raisins," she assented and smiled. So from that meeting we became fast friends, and I called her, for no reason that I know about now, "Aunt Ellen."

It was with such thoughts that I walked up the vine-shaded path to the old colonial doorway under its grape-like gloom. My heart beat faster as I lifted the brass knocker. She might not remember and she might have changed. And I thought desperately of bobbed hair and bright dresses. But it was the same familiar face that answered my knock. It might even have been the same black lace dress and white collar. She peered at me intently for a moment, and for a second I had a desire to run away and hide from my impending disappointment. But then she stepped back and opened wide the door.

"Come in," she said simply, "the gingerbread's still done."

"With raisins?" I inquired exultantly.

"Raisins," she laughed.

And I knew there are some things that do not change.—J. C. R.

seated a number of curves indicating an eleven-year cycle in tree growth, agricultural production, the value of fish and abundance of animals. It was thought, however, that much of the evidence advanced in support of the eleven or twelve year cycles fitted equally closely into a cycle of nine to ten years.

More significant was Dr. Huntington's charts showing a distinct cycle of droughts and of agricultural production. One of the most interesting of such wanderings is the migration of sperm whales, described by Dr. Charles Townsend of the New York Aquarium. The minute forms of life upon which these huge animals feed are abundant only in summer. In order to obtain the huge quantities which form their meals the whales each year wander back and forth over routes 6,000 or 8,000 miles long, enjoying our summer in the Northern Hemisphere and moving to the Southern Hemisphere for the Southern Summer.

Fish Affected Differently

The fish of the sea apparently are affected by different influences and in different manner from land animals, as shown by Dr. Harry M. Kyle of Hamburg and Glasgow. Their numbers may vary enormously, but a year in which fishermen do not catch a normal quantity of fish does not necessarily mean that there are fewer fish than usual in the sea. The ocean is so huge that the best food supply or the best spawning grounds may lead the fish to concentrate in parts of the ocean where there is commonly little fishing.

The rate of reproduction is a casual factor in fluctuations is also emphasized. The average litter of snowshoe rabbits tends to increase in certain years and to decrease when scarcity of food occurs. Dr. Huntington showed that even in man the rate of reproduction is closely correlated with climatic conditions. A rapidly increasing race like the Japanese would decline in numbers if the relative rates of deaths and of conceptions resulting in living births stayed steadily at the levels of September, when health and vigor are at a minimum.

"One of the outstanding features of the conference," Dr. Huntington says, "was the frequency with which was emphasized the fact that in spite of minor differences the general reactions of men, animals and even plants to physical environment are essentially the same. Certain great laws seem to run all the way through the whole realm of life, and one result of the working of these laws in cycles are a very widespread phenomena."

Busy With Great Thoughts

I have walked barefoot along drench-drenched trenches.

Mile on mile in meditation. My thoughts have come.

In rhythm with my stride, slowly, across the waste.

O'er land and sea and sky, seeking their destination.

In my heart.

So I have walked barefoot and been oblivious.

To sinking of my feet in sand along my way.

Oh, I have been oblivious to laws and labors.

Of the waters' sweep and swung beside me, been oblivious.

Within great thoughts.

I have been busy.

Aluminum-Plated Iron Incapable of Oxidation

London.—A new process for the plating of iron with aluminum has recently been evolved in Sweden, says Engineering. The process is the result of experimental work by H. Johansson, of Stockholm. The plating process is carried out at a temperature of 90 deg. C., and it is stated that the aluminum not only covers the surface of the iron effectively, but penetrates into the base metal to a certain extent. The resultant product, it is claimed, resists oxidation, and the influence of corroding gases and fluids. The process has been subjected to a series of tests at the Sandviken Iron and Steel Works, and this concern has acquired the sole rights for Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Finland, for the use of it in connection with the manufacture of cold-drawn and rolled tubes, and cold, drawn iron strip, which latter product is extensively used for the packing of pulp wood. At the present time, the process is being tested in connection with the manufacture of hot-rolled sheets and such appliances as kitchen ranges, stoves, dairy utensils and meat mincers.

"What's wrong with that?"

"My girl's name is Lizzie."

HE COULDN'T READ FOR INDIGESTION

"For some years previous to 1922 I was subject to indigestion, with headaches and thousands of stars sparkling in my eyes, which prevented me from reading. I decided to try Kruschen Salts. That was August, 1922, and I have taken a little in my first morning cup of tea ever since. I now eat anything, and am entirely free from indigestion or 'stars.'—F. C."

Now let it be said quite definitely, that what Kruschen did for him, it will do for everybody else who suffers from indigestion as he did. The fact is that "the little daily dose" first stimulates the flow of gastric juices to aid digestion, and then ensures complete, regular, and unflinching elimination of all waste matter every day.

Soon after you start on Kruschen you will begin to feel the benefit. You will find to your satisfaction that you are able to enjoy your food without any distressing after-effects. And, as you persevere, you will see that the relief which Kruschen brings is lasting relief.

The bicycle found last week bearing serial number 7404 has been claimed and returned to the owner by Chief Demill.

Fine diamonds in the latest mountings ranging in price from $15.00 to $100.00 are being shown at Vernon Tuck's.

The annual fruit tournament of the Grimsby Lawn Bowling Club will be held on September 5th, when many outside rinks will participate in this big annual event.

Councillors Chivers and Lewis represented the Grimsby council at the funeral of the late James Armstrong, contractor, at Hamilton on Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Howard Caudwell will be sending another bale of woollens to the mills at the beginning of September and Women's Institute members and friends are invited to join in. For particulars phone up 441.

For all Veterans who wish to attend the Veterans Day Parade in Toronto, on Saturday, August 29th, there will be transportation arranged, which will leave the Armouries, Grimsby, at 10 a. m.

A bicycle was found in a railway express car at the Beach on Tuesday. It bears a Hamilton license no. 1257, Crescent make, and the rear wheel is missing. Chief Demill has notified the Hamilton police with a view to ascertaining the owner.

The police are investigating the theft of a Buick Sedan, 1927 Model, stolen from in front of the Masonic Temple, St. Catharines. The driver of the car it was discovered, drove to Grimsby, but no trace of him has since been found.

On account of the heavy rains it has not been necessary to pump as much water as usual the past few days. Owing to the warm weather this summer there has been an unusually large amount of water used, it being necessary to restrict sprinkling to specified hours.

Services on Sunday next in Trinity United church will be conducted by the Rev. E. Burgess, Grimsby Beach. In the morning a duet will be rendered by Mrs. Gordon Eaton and Mrs. Geo. Shepherd and in the Evening Miss Margaret Stewart will sing.

AEROPLANES FOR SCHOOL FAIRS

The Last Article Published explained the construction of 75-A and 75-B, which are for III and IV class pupils. This article is for those who have entered or are entering class 75-C. This is an open class and any Rural School pupils is eligible to compete in this class. The cost of the kit for making this aeroplane which is considerably larger than either of the other two is $1.75.

Any or all of these kits may be secured from the Agricultural Office, St. Catharines. Special prizes are being offered at the Championship School Fair as follows - $10.00 divided into ten prizes from $2.00 down to 25c for the best ten De Havilland Models and a silver cup is being donated for the best made aeroplane in the three classes 75-A, 75-B, 75-C, by the Arthur Flint & Company, Toronto. A medal will be donated as a special prize by this company in each class at the local School Fairs.

This is a non flying scale model, it is made to resemble the actual plane as much as possible.

The sides of the fuselage may be laid out on a flat form in which each part is held in its correct position until the cement is dried, each side must be made on the same form. The form is first drawn on paper from the blueprint, the actual length of each side must be obtained from the blueprint showing the top view.

The wing, tail plane and rudder may also be laid out on a form, which is drawn on paper, the actual size taken from the blueprint.

To make a clean, neat strong job of the cowl, first make it of plain writing paper and then cover this with Balsapaper, which is supplied in the kit.

The tail skid is made from aluminum wire with the end flattened. Washers for propeller and wheels may be made from cardboard or aluminum.

Be sure to make a left hand propeller, that is, the propeller passes over the top of the cowl from right to left as seen by the pilot.

The oil tank is made from piece of balsawood one and one-half by seven-eighths by one-eighth, this is shown on blueprint No. 101A, and the necessary wood is supplied in each kit.

Before carving the propeller, draw the outline on the propeller block. A good effect can be obtained by painting the interior of the cabin white, which makes the cabin fixtures easier to see, although this is not essential.

An added effect may be obtained by using the following colour schemes. 1st. A red fuselage, with aluminum wing, stabilizer and rudder and aluminum trimmings, such as window frames, etc.

2nd. The Royal Canadian Airforce combination is, all yellow with a black engine cowlings, with tri-colour rings on upper and lower sides of each wing tip and each side of fuselage, with red, white and blue vertical bands on the rudder.

3rd. Most of the builders have ideas of their own for colouring and our suggestion is that you use colour schemes that will be durable and not easily made dirty.

Wing Covering

First iron out any creases in the paper and allow to cool before using. Lay the wing frame on a flat surface and place a piece of paper larger than the frame over it. By means of thumb tacks, stretch the paper over the frame, placing the thumb tacks around the outline of the wing. When all creases have disappeared apply thin balsawood oil with brush over the paper around the outline of the frame. Make sure that the balsawood oil has soaked through the paper to the frame. When the balsawood oil is dry trim around the edge of the wing, before moving the thumb tacks, with razor blade. If the wing is double covered, both sides will be covered in the same manner.

LOVE LAUGHS AT TELEPHONE TOLLS

Evening rates (7:00 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. local time) are considerably lower than day rates on "any-one" calls. Night rates (8:30 p.m. to 4:30 a.m.) are lower still.

Hospital days were lonely. Of course, her friends did all they could to keep her cheerful - her room was a bower of roses - but how she looked forward to evening when Jack could sit by her and talk of his day at the office.

Then came the news that he must leave town on business. She wondered how she could stand the wait until he came home. But Jack, wise fellow, knew how to bridge the gap. Promptly each evening at nine he called her over Long Distance and told her all the things she wished to hear.

Extravagant? . . . not a bit . . . for night rates are always inexpensive! What could be worth more for what it cost?

park never looked more inviting. The cottagers are taking increased pride in making their cottages and surroundings attractive while there have been so few vacant cottages, practically all of them having been taken.

It is noted that quite a few American people are coming in, some of whom are beginning to discover the attractiveness of this summering place for the first time. So impressed are many visitors to the beach with its attractiveness that it would not be surprising if additional cottages are built. During the summer months close to one thousand people make Grimsby Beach on Lake Ontario their place of residence.

Church Burned at Dundas—Loss $40,000

The insurance adjusters have submitted to the officials of St. Paul's United church, Dundas, the figures for the proposed fire adjustment and the offer is in the neighborhood of $40,000, including the furniture and church organ. The latter is now adjudged by experts to be a complete loss. A meeting of the official board of the church is to be held next week, when it is likely the award made by the insurance adjusters will be accepted. Once this is done plans for rebuilding can be taken up. There appears to be a growing feeling in the congregation in favor of building an entirely new church.

Corn Sold At Rate of One Cent For Dozen Cobs

From the reports of hucksters on the Hamilton market country produce is becoming a veritable "drug on the market", and prices have had to be slashed to a ridiculously low figure to dispose of any goods at all.

Corn sold on the market the other day at the rate of one cent a dozen cobs. This price was for the best table variety. Those who have cars need not even pay this much for corn, one farmer explained, as some of the market gardeners along the Brantford highway have erected signs at the roadside inviting people to enter and help themselves to corn right off the stalks. The generous gardener who issued this invitation pleaded with his guests not to destroy the stalks when removing the corn, as he wishes these preserved for fodder.

Manufacturers at the Ontario reformatory, Guelph, of Ontario license plates for 1932 will effect a saving of approximately $17,000 to the department public highways, it was recently learned. Design of the new plates has just been settled by the motor vehicle branch of the department. They will consist of black figures on a light gray background. The cost to the department of the reformatory-made plates of all classes will be 10c a pair, as compared with 12.9 cents for passenger car markers and 11.9 cents for commercial plates last year.

Hamilton Makes Big Gain In Population

The census figures for this year show that Hamilton has a population of 154,914, which is an increase of 35.1 per cent. during the last ten years. The figures approximate very closely to the prediction of Assessment Commissioner T. R. B. Robertson that the city would be shown to have a population of 155,000 when the last returns of the assessors were in.

IN CAMERA!

He had fallen in love with a picture face—but the reality was still more lovable.

By Rowan Glen

James Newell did not pause outside the photographer's shop window to look at the photographs, but because he wished to light a cigarette. Yet, as he inhaled the first mouthful of smoke, he found his interest caught and held by the image of a girl's face.

He looked at it for perhaps ten seconds, then moved slowly away. Five seconds later he returned. The photograph had fascinated him.

During his thirty-one years of life he had travelled in many countries and seen many lovely women. But the girl in the photograph was different—so he assured himself. She, too, was lovely, but there was a gentleness and witfulness in her expression which moved him strangely, and he seemed to glimpse in her big, widely set eyes a beautiful soul.

James went into the shop with a valiant air on his lips.

"You mind stepping outside for a moment?" he said to the assistant. "I'm interested in a photo in your window. Seems to me 's one of a friend of mine I haven't seen for years. Queer the way things happen. But if this is Miss Mary Brown, then I'll thank you for a reintroduction. She and I used to be great pals, before I went to Australia."

"Sorry, sir," said the assistant, "but that isn't the name."

"Well, it's odd! I could have sworn she was Miss Brown. Miss Brown must have a double—'s all. I can't make it out. I'd like to, though. What's this lady's name and address? You don't mind giving me that information?"

The assistant was dubious. "It might be different, sir," he said. "If you were a client of ours. But—" "I'm going to be a client of yours right away," James replied.

Before leaving the studio he had learned that the lady 's his dream was a Miss Doreen Sayers, who lived at 17, Harway Terrace, West Kensington. Her photograph had been taken only some three weeks previously.

"And your name and address, sir?" the assistant asked.

"Eh?" said James. "Oh, I see! James Newell, Savoy Hotel. I expect to be there for a few weeks yet, but you know nothing about me, so I'd better pay you now."

Half an hour later he was in Harway Terrace, and asking himself what the deuce he was to do when he reached No. 17. It was one thing to have found her home, but quite another to arrange for an introduction. But when he saw a neat notice which announced "Board-Residence," his problem was solved.

As a maid was showing him into a lounge off the small hall he saw Doreen Sayers. She did not see him. One of her small hands held a suitcase, the other was extended to an elderly woman whom James guessed to be the landlady.

"I'm terribly sorry to be leaving, Mrs. Oliver," she was saying, "but I think you know how things are. Mr. Ward has been with you for years and years, and I wouldn't dream of asking you to get rid of him for my sake. But—"

"A him here the situation has become impossible for me, I mean. I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll send all my looking-for-a-home friends to you. You have been most awfully kind and understanding."

"That's all right, Miss Sayers," another and less musical voice answered. "I wish you weren't leaving, but it can't be helped. Mr. Ward has been a pest to you. I know, but I don't intend to let him go. Maybe you'll come and see me now and then? It isn't as though you were going far away. Just around the corner, so to speak. No. 3, Rigg Crescent. I've made a note of it, and I'll send on any letters."

"And you won't tell Mr. Ward where I am?" Promise!

"I promise. Well, good-bye—and I hope you'll be happy in the new boarding-house."

"Thanks ever so much," James heard Doreen say. "I wish there were more Mrs. Olivers in the world and less Mr. Wards."

"You're being too hard on him," the landlady said. "The trouble is, he's determined to marry you and you don't want to marry him."

The voices faded, but a couple of minutes later an apologetic Mrs. Oliver was in the lounge and speaking to a tall, big-shouldered man, whom she hoped to number among her "guests." After a reasonable time James removed that impression with a tact which was one of his greatest assets.

Towards evening, the same day, James called at 3, Rigg Crescent, booked a room there, and, an hour or so later, brought his traps along from the Savoy.

After dinner he met Doreen, and liked her all the more because she seemed to be so shy.

"I came here only to-day," she explained, when he was sharing a sunset picture with her from the balcony outside the dining-room. "You did, too, didn't you?"

He nodded.

"Been here about three hours," he said. "I feel as strange as you do. More strange, perhaps, for you are used to London, and I'm from overseas. Seven weeks ago I was up in the Blue Mountains—that's New South Wales."

"Oh! Australia?"

"That's it. A great country, Miss Sayers. Ever been there?"

"No. I haven't travelled much. I've never been able to afford it."

James laughed.

"That's funny, in a way," he said. "I couldn't afford not to."

"That was the start of their friendship, and a good enough start; but one evening, when James had been at No. 3 Rigg Crescent for four days, an unforeseen incident took place. It had been his valiant plan to ask Doreen to go to a theatre with him, but when he searched for her in the study drawing-room he saw her trying to push away a stout, dark-haired man.

"But, Doreen, you've got to be sensible. I was saying, 'You need money now, and a lot of it! I have what you'd call abundance. I've told you before.'"

"I know you have. That's why you shouldn't tell me again, Mr. Ward. Why can't you leave me alone?"

It was at that delightful moment that James took a hand in things.

"I hope you'll excuse me, sir," he said to Mr. Ward, "but Miss Sayers and I are going out to dine, and the time's getting on. You're nearly ready, Miss Sayers?"

For perhaps four seconds she hesitated, then she nodded.

"I shan't be more than five minutes," she said. "Perhaps you'll see my friend here out? But first I must introduce you."

"Sorry to have butted in like that," James remarked genially, when Doreen had left the room. "You know what girls are, though—never on time except when they're going out to buy clothes or hats. Miss Sayers hasn't mentioned you to me. Are you old friends?"

"I have known Miss Sayers, sir, for nearly a year," the other answered. "And I'd like to know who the devil you are, and what you mean by—"

But when he saw a neat notice which announced "Board-Residence," his problem was solved.

As a maid was showing him into a lounge off the small hall he saw Doreen Sayers. She did not see him. One of her small hands held a suitcase, the other was extended to an elderly woman whom James guessed to be the landlady.

"I'm terribly sorry to be leaving, Mrs. Oliver," she was saying, "but I think you know how things are. Mr. Ward has been with you for years and years, and I wouldn't dream of asking you to get rid of him for my sake. But—"

The voices faded, but a couple of minutes later an apologetic Mrs. Oliver was in the lounge and speaking to a tall, big-shouldered man, whom she hoped to number among her "guests." After a reasonable sending out about a thing like that!"

Immediately after that reason went down before emotion. He put an arm about her swiftly and strongly; kissed her; told her he loved her; begged her to be his wife.

"I'm going back to Australia in a fortnight," he ended. "I want you to come with me. You can sing there if you feel like singing. And if we do travel 'tourist,' why—"

"You're mad!" she told him. "So am I! Every body is mad! Oh, I— it's no good, Jim! I'll—I'll have to think things over. There are my debts—or, rather, my father's debts."

"Just one question. You care for me a bit?"

"Far more than a bit. But I expect I'll end by marrying Charles Ward."

"Not you!" said James.

Three days later Doreen came to James and said:

"Everything's all right. Some anonymous person has sent me a bank draft for $2,500. Do you think it was Mr. Ward?"

"It might have been," he said. She smiled at him.

"I know it wasn't," she answered. Listen! I want to get some more copies of my photo this morning and found one of yours beside mine! Then there were explanations—and I learned how a Mr. James Newell, of the Savoy Hotel, had got my address. Did you send the $2,500?"

"I did," he admitted.

"Are you rich?"

"So-so."

Doreen gripped his arm.

"I'm glad I told you—about caring for you—when I thought you were poor."

"That was the idea," said James. After that he said nothing at all for several minutes.—Answers.

What's Funny in Thi ?

Familiarity takes the edge off humor.

Say a name over a dozen times, and the first laugh at its eddy dies in your throat.

Bruno Lessing in the New York American sets East and West talking:

"Paris—As you wander from spot to spot where Americans congregate, you hear many funny things. Here's one from the Ritz Bar. A young Chicago boy was sitting beside a yellowish lad who must have been a native of one of France's Asiatic colonies, but who spoke perfect English.

"Chicago—'Say, that's a peach of a pagoda you got out in the Exposition. The catalog says it's 'Khmer' architecture. What's 'Khmer'?"

"Chicago—'It's such a funny name. The idea of anybody being named Khmer.'"

"Yellow—'Oh, I don't know. What's funny about it? You've got a chap running your American exhibit who calls himself Bascom Slomp.'"

"Chicago—'What's funny about that?'"

"Yellow—'What's his real name?'"

"Chicago—'Bascom Slomp.'"

"Yellow—'Ha! Ha! Ha!'"

Graf Zeppelin Circles Over British Isles

London—Soaring above the rain clouds, the Graf Zeppelin's first party of British tourists on August 19th saw the sun rise over the Mull of Galloway from the hills of lowland Scotland dimly defined in the distance.

After making the first peace-time landing of a German Zeppelin on English soil, the great silver dirigible circled southern England, racing through the sky with lights shining from its gondola. The airship headed for Ireland by way of the Bristol Channel and after passing over Dublin steered for Ulster and Scotland with the breaking of dawn.

"I have known Miss Sayers, sir, for nearly a year," the other answered. "And I'd like to know who the devil you are, and what you mean by—"

The ADVENTURES of CAPTAIN JIMMY and his Dog SCOTTIE

What came before After Captain Jimmy and his Chinese friends were rescued from the desert island, by the freighter "Madrigal," they might a strange looking craft bring at another boat. Chung took the telescope and tries to identify the ship.

The telescope suddenly collapsed in Chung's hands, as telescopes will when you squeeze them. Chung was all dismay—where a moment before he was delighted with the wonderful Magic Eye that would bring distant objects close up.

"Lookie Stickie allee gone," he wailed.

I showed him how it stretched out and soon he had it working fine, in spite of the laughter of the sailors. Carefully he surveyed the ship which fired the cannon, then as we watched him he seemed to turn three shades paler and dropped the glass with a sudden cry.

"What is it Chung," I asked hurriedly.

But Chung was so upset that he lapsed into a curious chatter of Chinese and English and goodness knows what. I could not understand a word of it. Everyone stopped tense and excited. Evidently Chung knew something was going on out there in the China Sea.

I shook him roughly. "What is it," I said.

"Pirates!" said Chung and his teeth shivered.

Pirates! So that was it. Those dreaded villains that infest the Chinese waters and prey on weak vessels. There was not much time to waste, if we wanted to save the little ship, at which they were firing.

The decks of the "Madrigal" became a scene of the wildest excitement, as we worked feverishly getting ready to take off in our plane, toward the scene of battle. Soon we had it overboard, unharmed and away, at the side of the derrick.

"Pirates!" repeated Chung, savagely, and before I could stop him he climbed out on the derrick boom and slid down the pulley ropes to the plane.

"Come back, Chung," I yelled but I might as well have remained quiet for Chung sat with clenched fists in the cockpit, swearing terrible things in Chinese.

I was amazed. Chung, of all people, was the last man on earth that I would have expected to turn warrior. It was not until a long time later that I learned that the pirates had broken up Chung's boyhood home on the river and laid the district waste and ever since then he had hoped for a chance to clean up on the Chinese hands.

Really, his was a case of splendid courage, for he was actually scared white—or rather scared lemon yellow—with fear, yet he wanted to take revenge for the murder of his family. My respect for Chung grew immensely.

Taking him along with me in the plane was impossible, however, I needed the room for an experienced gunner. The mate of the "Madrigal" had some naval training on board a warship, so I took him.

Our artillery consisted of two heavy shot-guns and plenty of shells, also long range automatic pistol. We would have given a fortune for some really good bombs—big ones with plenty of pep—but we had to take such weapons as happened to be on board.

Reminiscences

When Edwin Booth was playing at the Lyceum Theatre, London—theater under Henry Irving's management—a letter came to Mrs. Irving asking for three seats for herself and her two sons. Arising out of that letter occurred what Booth called "one of the desperately trying moments of my life—when only Irving's fine breeding saved me from crushing embarrassment."

The letter was peculiarly worded. It permitted a double meaning. The writer phrased it:

"I wish to bring my sons to see you so they may see what great acting is."

Booth knew what Mrs. Irving meant but could not resist a chuckle over that unconscious double entendre. He laid the note on his dressing-table, but was puzzled over it. Why should he be asked for a box by Mrs. Irving, his husband's theatre? While he was making up, who should come in but Irving himself! He walked at once to the dressing-table and his eyes lighted on the letter.

"Ah, Mrs. Irving!" he exclaimed pleasantly.

A Most Delicious Cake

1 cup white sugar, 1/2 cup butter, 2 eggs, 1/2 cup sour milk, 1 teasp. soda, level, 1 orange, 1 ripe banana, 1 cup raisins, 1/2 teasp. vanilla, 2 cups flour. Method: Cut up the orange in chunks and put it all through a grinder. Grind the raisins and banana as well. If it is not quite fine put it all through the grinder twice.

In another dish cream the butter and sugar, add the eggs and beat. Put in the fruit, then add the milk and flour alternately, putting the soda in the milk. The mixture should be light but not running. Put into a greased pan on buttered wax paper to fit the bottom and bake in a moderate oven. Allow the cake to cool a little, then turn out on board and remove paper. When cool ice the cake.

Icing

Boil 1/2 cup white sugar and 1/2 cup brown sugar with 1/2 cup water until it threads well. Add this syrup to about 14 marshmallows, cut up, and beat till it is smooth. Spread on the cake. The icing should be smooth and soft but not sticky.

Twilight Hour Story Chicks and Other Furry Friends No. 33

I told you last time about the chicks' house getting too small for them. It wasn't very warm outside, either, as Billy would soon tell you, but you see the chicks were covered so completely with those warm white feathers that they didn't mind the cold one bit. Did you ever notice how one feather lies on top of the other so neatly and closely? Then besides that, underneath the feathers close to their warm bodies was a layer of down as soft as the dress they had on when they were babies. Do you remember? You see, they had on such very warm clothes now, even when the wind blew they didn't need to care unless, of course, it blew too hard.

Well, what did they do about having a bigger home? That box was certainly getting too small. You see, Billy couldn't put those little chickens with the other hens, because, isn't it queer, those big hens might hurt them. Yes, very likely they would. In fact, I'm pretty sure they would. Big chickens some way or other don't like smaller chickens to come and live with them. They don't mind so much sometimes if they grow right up with them, but just to go and put them into their pen suddenly and leave them there would make the hens real cross. They would not let the little fellows have anything to eat or go to get a drink of water out of the pan or do anything. If the chicks would try they would get a hard peck that hurt like everything. In fact, the only thing for them to do would be to go and huddle up in a corner and not move, so the hens would forget they were there. Now why do hens act like that? Well, I don't know. I guess it is just chickens' ways. Oh, there are such a lot of things we don't know about, don't you think so? But we do know a few things, don't we? And if we keep hunting around and learning something here and something there, first thing we know we'll be knowing quite a bit. We know this much, and that is that strange little chickens, even if they are half grown, mustn't be put in with big ones.

Billy's daddy wasn't very busy just then, so he and Billy hunted around for a place to put them. There was a little room in the barn which they used in the spring when they raised little chickens in the incubator. My, but this is a big word, isn't it? You ask your mamma what an incubator is. I'm pretty sure she will know, and then some other time we might tell you more about it. Well, they hadn't used this room for a long time because it was too small. It was just filled with a lot of things like a couple of pails and feed boxes and things like that.

"There now, Billy, you can get to work and clean out this little room for your pets. I'll let you put them in here if you keep it clean," said Billy's daddy.

"Oh, daddy, this will be a fine place for them," laughed Billy, as he jumped around in great glee. And now next time we are going to find out just how beautifully Billy fixed up this little room.

NOT KEEN

A young man who had failed to make good in England was settled on a farm in Kenya by indulgent parents. In a few days one of his neighbors called.

"I say," said the visitor, "we'd like to know if you'd care to join a few of us who are going to hunt for lions."

"Well—er—thank you," said the young man, somewhat taken aback. "It's awfully decent of you, but—er—I don't think I've lost any lions."

REPENTANCE

Many who think they are repenting are thinking more of sin's punishment than of its power.

Seaside Romeo: "I've had no luck with that girl. I've passed her every day for the last fortnight, and she hasn't smiled once." Friend: "Some woman have no sense of humor."

"I understand De Post is doing much better than formerly in the poetry line."

"Why, he told me he hadn't written a line for six months."

"Yes, he told me the same thing."

An Interesting Study

Lord Duncannon, young son of Earl of Beaconsfield, Canada's governor-general.

Better Late

The late-comer to a London concert hall, who imagined he was visiting a variety entertainment, arrived in time to hear a performance not at all to his taste.

He picked the man next to him. "I say, what's this stuff we're getting?"

"Hush," came the shocked reply: "this is Beethoven's Ninth Symphony."

"Well," muttered the non-musical man, "if the other eight were like this, thank goodness I was late!"

Easy

The jealous wife of a theatrical manager was puffed when he came home and announced that he had that day selected from a big crowd twenty-four wonderful chorus girls.

"I suppose," she declared, sarcastically, "it was very difficult work for you?"

"Oh, no, dear," he told her. "Simply a matter of form."

"Humph! Brown absent again today? I'll bet he's got some sort of lame excuse."

"Yes, sir. Broke his leg, sir."

"Of any living thing."

Perhaps you've left a family! I wonder if you've ever sinned... Or if your tiny, shattered bones will rattle in the wind.

"And let them have dominion..." If I've done a thing that wasn't right, Your little ghost will cross my floor And haunt me through the night.

Sunday School Lesson

August 30. Lesson IX.—The Mission to Cyprus—Acts 12: 25 to 13: 12. Golden Text—I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.—Romans 1: 16.

ANALYSIS

I. A MISSIONARY CHURCH, Acts 12: 1-3. II. THE FIRST MISSION FIELD, Acts 13: 1-3.

I. A MISSIONARY CHURCH, Acts 12: 1-3. (a) The Leaders. In the list of five leaders in the church, the name of Barnabas is placed first, and that of Saul last, v. 1. They had not yet "discovered" Saul. Or was it that their memory of the man who was obscure the man he had become? But he will not remain long in the background. Of the other three we know little or nothing. They are forgotten. Yet the unheralded work they did in Antioch sent Christianity out into the Gentile world. Where would the church be without the devotion and sacrifice of the "unknown disciples"? (b) God's Separated Men. As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul," v. 2. The conviction was growing upon them that these two men were the ones specially gifted for the work they had in mind. Does the Holy Spirit speak like that today? Assuredly. But in our modern way of putting it, we speak not of the One who inspired the deed, but of his agents, a minister perhaps or a mother, or a church council. Who gave them the impulse? Saul and Barnabas responded when the call came. Barnabas had the encouragement of past successes, 9: 27; 11: 24f. Saul still carried the dream that flashed upon him in Jerusalem—"I will send thee in, hence unto the Gentiles." God and Barnabas and Saul had been getting ready for this day.

II. THE FIRST MISSION FIELD, Acts 13: 1-3. (a) Cyprus. The work to which Barnabas and Saul were called was not merely missionary work, it was a mission to Gentiles. That was the forward step. The baptism of Cyrenians was ratified, it is true, but he was considered a "special case!" The baptism of the Ethiopian eunuch was quite "unofficial." Gentiles had been received into the church, but they came in through the door of the synagogue and observed Jewish law. Now, however, the church turned directly to the Gentiles and established churches based not on Jewish privilege, but on God's universal love. Cyprus was the first port of call. It was familiar ground to Barnabas, since his home was there. Apart from some Jews in Salamis and Paphos, the population of the island was Greek. This was a real breakthrough. Their method was to preach in the synagogues wherever possible, bringing their message "to the Jew first," and then to the Gentiles. When the Jews refused to respond they turned to the Gentiles, ignoring their own race. From Salamis they worked their way westward toward Paphos, the capital of Cyprus.

(b) Christianity at Court. Arriving in Paphos, the missionaries were summoned before the Roman pro-consul, Sergius Paulus. Attached to his household was a sorcerer, v. 6. Seeing in the clear arguments of the strangers a danger to his own standing, Elymas, as he was called, began to dispute. Blind to the truth himself, he tried to prevent his master from seeing it. It was a critical moment for Christianity on this its first appearance before Roman aristocracy. Saul's trained mind instantly grasped the situation. He stepped forward, "as he eyes on Elymas (v. 9) —one thinks of Napoleon's 'Olympian anger' and the 'unbearable flash' of his eyes—blasted him with that terror-inspiring rebuke, and the overwhelmed sorcerer was led, blinded, from the room. Sergius, amazed at the 'doctrine of the Lord,' believed, that is, believed that Saul was a true prophet. We do not know that he became a Christian.

(c) Paul Comes Forward. When the missionaries set out they were "Barnabas and Saul." When they left as they were "Paul and his companions." Barnabas, generous soul could say, like Collier of Manchester, "I am out for the kingdom; it is the kingdom that matters to me and the moment I find a man who is a quarter of an inch bigger than I am, and can do the work better than I can I am ready to get him to crowd to hold his coat and back him, while he does it."

Not only did Saul come into prominence at Paphos, he adopted his Roman name, Paul. Saul of Tarsus had been such an ardent Jew that perhaps he did not value very highly his Roman citizenship. Now, however, his attitude was changing. It must have given him prestige in the presence of the Roman deputy. His new faith was breaking down his Jewish pride. The refusal of the Jews to accept Christ was turning his thoughts to his other kinsmen of the Empire. His triumph before Sergius must have fired his imagination with the thought of converting the empire. Henceforth he is Paul, the Roman citizen, and his work lies in the Roman world.

An actor entertaining a party of friends to lunch was annoyed by the slowness of the service. The waiter seemed casual in the extreme, and refused to hurry.

When the bill was presented the actor doled out the exact sum, adding one solitary halfpenny.

"The waiter coughed, haven't you, sir? This here is a ha'penny."

"No mistake, no mistake," said the actor, with a bitter smile. "I never give less."

Schneider Race Trials Started

R. A. F. Pilots Determined to Win Famous Cup Outright

Calshot, Hampshire, England.—Roaring in swift aeroplanes over Southampton water and the Solent, picked speed pilots of the Royal Air Force are preparing to battle hard for the Schneider trophy they have already won twice in succession. If they win again, they win the trophy outright and permanently.

British planes last time, in 1923, tore over the 200 mile course at six miles a minute to defeat France and Italy. Outside the actual Schneider races, the British high speed pilots made world records which still remain unbroken. This year they want to beat their own records. They have "hush hush" planes whose exact speed capabilities are carefully guarded secrets.

The race will take place on Sept. 12 and Italy and France are again expected to be Britain's opponents. Which three machines will actually represent Britain in the world's greatest speed test, and the classic of aviation, will not be decided until the eve of the contest. Eight pilots of the Royal Air Force have been in strict training for months and three of them will be chosen later to pilot the machines.

The contest again will be largely an affair of Governments. In this respect it is unique in the world of sports, if indeed it can be classed in the world of sports and its highly important strategic aspects put in the background.

Engines Concealed

The second of two, new, British aeroplanes reached Calshot recently. The engines of both planes are concealed for the most part, with few gadgets visible, and to the lay observer they convey little, except perhaps a slight impression of great power in reserve. They seem rather like strange, lean sharks which suddenly dart from the water and cross the horizon in a roar of power and a blaze of speed.

The course, again over the waters of Spithead and the Solent, covers 217 statute miles. Conditions introduced for the first time this year require all aircraft to carry out certain preliminary trials on the day of the race before the actual contest. And these preliminaries have necessitated some changes in design. To cover both preliminary trials and the actual speed contest the machines have to carry a greater weight at take-off, which of course tends to increase weight in other directions. The new conditions are roughly estimated to amount to an extra lap of the race.

It is doubtful whether the great increase in speed marking the successive races so far will be maintained this year, in view of the new requirement. But the R. A. F. high speed flight will be fully prepared and ready to try for hitherto unheard of rates of speed.

Legal grounds for breaking an engagement are listed and suits for damages arising out of breach of promise to marry are provided for, but the new law specifically prohibits the old custom under which it was legally possible to force a reluctant man or woman to fulfill a betrothal contract. In future girls under 15 and boys under 17 may not become engaged and marriages may not be concluded until after a girl has passed her sixteenth year nor until a boy has completed his eighteenth year.

China's old law gave formal legal status to concubines and provided that the sons of concubines should share in the family inheritance. The new law does not mention concubinage, but permits a wife to obtain a divorce if her husband is guilty of illicit relations with any other woman and also specifies that children born out of wedlock are not to share inheritances unless they have subsequently been adopted.

Since immemorial times Chinese women have been susceptible to punishment by imprisonment for adultery and the new law provides the same punishment for husbands guilty of a like offense.

In the past the Chinese State has never concerned itself with divorces. Under the new law husband or wife may apply to a court for a divorce if they choose to do so, but they may also effect a private divorce by mutual agreement if the divorce settlement is made out in duplicate and signed before witnesses.

Chinese Women Try "New" Freedom

Emancipation Fills Courts With Winning Cases for Shares in Estates

By HALLETT ABBEND IN THE New York Times

Shanghai, China.—The rapidly with which Chinese women are beginning to understand their position of legal equality with men, as attested by the number of cases already filling the courts, shows that an understanding of China's new laws on family relations, is spreading at an astonishing rate.

Win Estate Cases

Already there are court cases in which women are testing the application of the new law which provides that sons and daughters are to share equally in family inheritances. Under the old family system not only did a single daughter inherit nothing, but a married daughter was considered as the property of her husband's family, and would never have dreamed of asking for a share of the family property after the death of her parents. In all cases so far decided under the new law, married or unmarried women who have sued their brothers for a share of the family estate have won.

The new code protects the position of widows by giving them one-third of the estates of their husbands and also permits them to dispose of their property by making such wills as they choose.

Married women, under the old laws, could own no separate property. Even their marriage dowries, the wedding gifts and all presents made to them personally in after years were the unquestioned properties of their husbands. In the new code China has followed the Swiss system, which permits three regimes to rule with regard to property of man and wife. The newly married couple may announce a community property regime, a union of property regime, or a separate property regime. If no special arrangement is made, the union of property regime automatically becomes a community property regime.

Under the old laws, the family property was insufficient for household expenses, a wife's personal property must be drawn upon for half the family's support.

Marry of Own Free Will

The ancient Chinese custom under which parents arranged the betrothal of their children, and which made such betrothals as legally binding as marriages, is done away with. In the future, an agreement to marry shall be made by the male and female parties of their own accord.

Legal grounds for breaking an engagement are listed and suits for damages arising out of breach of promise to marry are provided for, but the new law specifically prohibits the old custom under which it was legally possible to force a reluctant man or woman to fulfill a betrothal contract. In future girls under 15 and boys under 17 may not become engaged and marriages may not be concluded until after a girl has passed her sixteenth year nor until a boy has completed his eighteenth year.

Under the new law husband or wife may apply to a court for a divorce if they choose to do so, but they may also effect a private divorce by mutual agreement if the divorce settlement is made out in duplicate and signed before witnesses.

China's old law gave formal legal status to concubines and provided that the sons of concubines should share in the family inheritance. The new law does not mention concubinage, but permits a wife to obtain a divorce if her husband is guilty of illicit relations with any other woman and also specifies that children born out of wedlock are not to share inheritances unless they have subsequently been adopted.

Since immemorial times Chinese women have been susceptible to punishment by imprisonment for adultery and the new law provides the same punishment for husbands guilty of a like offense.

In the past the Chinese State has never concerned itself with divorces. Under the new law husband or wife may apply to a court for a divorce if they choose to do so, but they may also effect a private divorce by mutual agreement if the divorce settlement is made out in duplicate and signed before witnesses.
